DAY 1

Casablanca: Where the Search Begins

Making sense of guidance rarely begins with clarity — it begins with seeking. Casablanca is where we arrive, but more than that, where we begin. At the Hassan II Mosque, with the Atlantic stretching just beyond, we stand for our first prayers together.

Later, we walk the Medina, unhurried, before ending by the ocean. Wind, waves, open horizon. Take a moment here, don't rush it. When was the last time you stood before something vast, with nowhere else to be?

DAY 2

Fes: Entering a City of Seekers

Fes isn't a place you just visit. You enter it. A home of seekers across many generations, people who travelled far, often without initially knowing what they would find.

At Zawiya of Moulay Idriss, we sit where many once came in hope — gathering for prayers, dhikr, and halaqah within its walls. Being present. The Medina pulls us in after. Narrow paths, quiet lives, a rhythm that feels older than us. You begin to notice... not everything needs to move fast.

DAY 3

Fes: Where Knowledge Was Sought with Everything

There was a time when knowledge was sought with everything a person had, and Fes was one of its homes. We walk through Qarawiyyin, Bou Inania, Seffarine, and the Marinid Tombs — places where knowledge wasn't casual, it shaped lives.

Seeking was never passive, it was a journey people gave their lives to. You begin to wonder — what were they searching for, and what made it worth it?

DAY 4

Tangier: From Mountains to Coast

Between mountains, a town of blue appears — Chefchaouen. A town known for its calm, almost reflective atmosphere. By evening, we're in Tangier — but not in a hotel. We sit close, simple, unguarded... with the Qur'an. And you realise, sometimes the spaces that change you most don't look like much at all.

DAY 5

The Beginning of a Journey

The day starts in a farmhouse, with a khala (Moroccan aunty) who welcomes us into her space and shows us how cheese is made. A craft reminding us to honour knowledge in all its forms, for within them are sustenance, care, and ways of living that quietly endure.

Later, we wander the medina and kasbah — paths once walked by those before us. Narrow lanes, worn walls, each carrying traces of those who came seeking.

Then, Rmilat Park. The trees slowly open to the sea. Under the sky, with wind and waves close by, we sit — dhikr, halaqah. Being present. As night falls, we return 'home', gathering once more with the Qur'an — to sit with it, and let it speak.

DAY 6

Making Space

Our morning takes us to the resting place of Ibn Battuta, guided through the story of a man who left this land and travelled for nearly 30 years, to seek. And then... the day opens up. Not everything needs to be filled. Perhaps, a good time to revisit what you have not had time to sit with.

By the Mediterranean, we sit with nothing but horizon. If you find your thoughts slowing here, let them. Some answers don't come when you're searching hard. They come when you finally make space.

DAY 7

Marrakech: What Grounds You

Marrakech feels like everything all at once. Movement, noise, colour. It can feel like a lot at first, but sometimes that is where you begin to notice what grounds you.

At Koutoubia Mosque, we gather again. A place people have always returned to. No matter how busy life gets, there is always a point you can come back to. You just have to know where it is.

DAY 8

In the company of those who lived for Allah and Rasulallah ﷺ

There are places that simply remind you how others once lived, and who they lived for. At the Maqam of the Seven Saints, we walk among those who lived for Allah, including Imam al-Jazuli, whose Dalā'il al-Khayrāt still echoes across the world.

Lives once filled with striving, now returned to stillness — yet still teaching.

The day opens after — Majorelle gardens, medina, even a hammam. Rest is part of the journey too. Not everything is about striving. Some of it is about being restored.

DAY 9

Casablanca: Processing and Unfolding

We return to Casablanca, where the journey first began — but not quite the same. We walk the Habous quarter with a guide, a quieter part of the city where tradition continues in everyday life.

By now, some things make more sense, others are still unfolding, and that's alright. That night, we sit one last time. Reflecting... what has changed? What are you taking with you?

DAY 10

Departure: Continuing the Search

Al-Maghreb is a land of many spiritual beginnings — seekers, scholars, travellers. As you leave, you may realise the journey was never about finding everything all at once.

Life itself is a journey — long unfolding. It isn't meant to be understood in a single moment. Sometimes, we need to step away, just enough to see where we are.

This retreat is one of those pauses within the journey, only a chapter within something much greater. You may not leave with 100% clarity. But you leave knowing how to keep seeking, with the certainty that Allah has never forsaken you, and never will.
